The Bank determines the access rights to the Premises and to the individual rooms within the Premises according to the purpose of access—e.g. guest, contractual partner, employee—in a way that can be verified by the individual, therefore, prior to entering the Premises, the Bank asks the Data Subjects to identify themselves, and then an access card is made and given to the Data Subject, which allows him/her to enter the specified areas of the Premises.

In the access control system, we distinguish between two separate sets of data, one consisting of the personal data of the Data Subject, which are necessary for the operation of the access control system, and the other data set concerns movements; these data are generated during the operation of the access control system and are related to the Data Subject.

The access rights granted to the Data Subject may be temporary (e.g. guests) or permanent (e.g. contractual partners, employees).

Only authorised persons have access to the data recorded with the access control system, unauthorised persons cannot access such data. No data transfers are made to third countries or organisations.
